foreword

In the creation of this Yearbook, we, the Editors, have tried to keep in mind what we felt this Yearbook to be: a lasting gift to the students of this past academic year from the Class of '67. It has seemed to us that such an aim has been best fulfilled by the placing of emphasis upon the daily life of the students through the medium of photography — not only such photography that has touched upon the usual formal pictures of the individual teachers and students, the clubs, student government, sports, dramatic and musical productions, but also those candids which have portrayed the students in their studying, in their relaxation, in their associations with their teachers, in their solitude, in their being together. We have also hoped to show, through the use of drawings, that the daily life of the students has been lived in Rome and among the Romans. It is, therefore, with feelings of pleasure and accomplishment, that we present the 1967 Tabularium.

THE EDITORS

dedication

SILVIO ESTRADA

A cookie jar in the back room, your private padded-cell; kittens for sale, cheap; the directing of the students in magic musicals; chorus and guitar classes to the backdrop of a restless piano; the casual yet enthusiastic gathering for a guitar assembly. After three years at O.S.R., all of this, or Silvio Estrada, is leaving. During your three years here, you have been a strong and inspiring influence upon the students. Without you the many musical productions and assemblies that we put on could never have been the successes they were. We, the Editors of the 1967 Tabularium, dedicate this yearbook to you, Mr. Estrada, a man who has helped make the past three years at O.S.R. particularly memorable for the students who have shared them with you, from class work to personal help and guidance. We hope that this dedication will show our deep appreciation and gratitude.

In February they prune Rome's trees.
Great branches crash to the ground.
Stirred air smells green.

The trunk's the root. Wire shoots sprout from the stumps—
the severed limb's forgotten.

A brown sparrow flies to a brawn branch—
new leaf on an old tree—song, source, and root.

Suddenly golden, mimosa explodes the city with color.
Winter melts under a green sun.

Pruned trees
change branches for roots.
Sparkling sparrows wake spring.

ALISON SARA MINET

Reviewing the performance of this year's Senior class, I find one particular characteristic of leadership that distinguishes you. This characteristic has been the subject of frequent comments from the Faculty. You have maintained a high level of academic effort and performance through the year and have avoided the « letdown » that traditionally affects Senior classes once first-semester grades are in and college acceptances begin to arrive. This has made it possible for your classes to continue functioning effectively for members of other grades and has been a clear example of your sense of responsibility and dedication to your fellow-students. Other characteristics of leadership have been evident in your direction of student government and activities and your particular participation in such special projects as helping the human and material victims of flood disaster in Florence and in the school's annual campaign to assist local orphanages at Christmastime (« Operation Outreach »).

On behalf of the Overseas School, I should like to thank the Seniors for their achievements and contribution to the school's life. It is the hope of the entire Faculty that you will carry this same spirit of responsibility to others and active involvement in the total life of the school and community wherever you go in future years. Whatever that may be, you bear with you our hopes, our pride, and our fond best wishes.

Though deep, yet clear, though gentle, yet not dull, Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full

I, Andrew Jordan, hereby leave the first semester of my Senior year that I couldn't enjoy to the next Senior class, to Chris Sadlow-ski and the other high jumpers of future generations a bar with its minimum height at 6 feet, my thanks to Dr. Haas, Mr. Glassman and Mr. Nelson, and lastly my love for all students to Claire Hamisch.

I, Jelena Zarkovich, will my anemia to Miss Halperin, my medicine to Sandy Dosne, and my split-proof hair (almost) to Carol Cutrone.

You look
And see a shadow of yourself,
A soft and shuddering reflection
In a fluctuating wave.
The full flow
Of a coughing current,
The drain and the swell,
All that drawn together.
You see a shape
Of all you ever were or did
And all you ever wanted to be Held in the terror
Of a trembling tide—
You.

You feel
A shock in the weight of yourself,
And you want a moment suspended
For contemplation and exultation,
To be washed over in a watery wave.
The retrospect of some tender moment,
To understand the backwash of what you are...
Because you feel the melancholy
In what is happening to you:
The plunge, the breaking wave.
Yourself breaking away.
The sad and joyous tears
Are shed into a pool of yourself,
All that has been and is a part of you.

CANDIS CUNNINGHAM

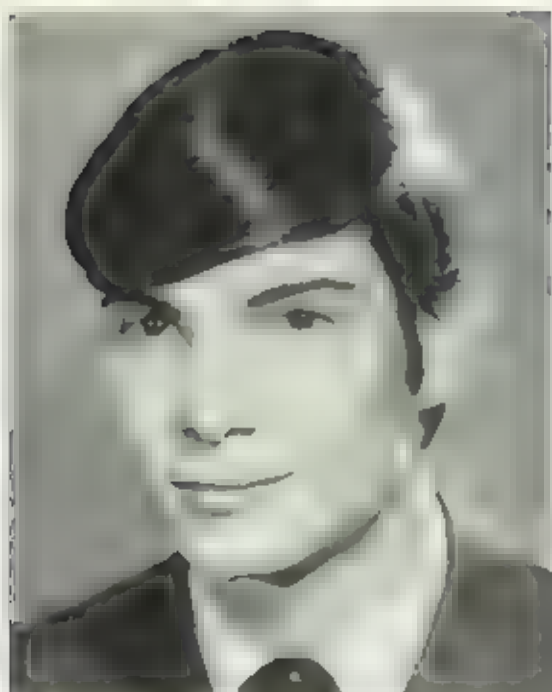

class of 1968

If it had all taken place in a theatre, we could have had Phil announce the title as « One More Year towards Death. » Nance could have provided the costumes, Bruno and Sandy the choreography, Louis the songs, and Robin the stage-directions. But it has not been a play and we have each had to provide our own parallel actions. We were all (and sadly enough always will be) fifty-two separate people.

We quickly rebelled against the « Traditional Influence » of the seniors, physically and intellectually. Then, admittedly in vain, we tried to replace our lost heroes with a superhero. Not many of us had the appropriate costume, so we continued on our way - heroless.

I suppose some might have been inspired by the doughnut sales and the Prom Committee to pursue... a life of economics?... though I doubt any of us have yet met with the deciding factors in our lives. But we have progressed one year along the way and played our parts well. For a while all of this will remain vividly in our minds. But as we step into a new phase, with our Senior year, this will pass along into the vast obscurity of memory.

The sophomore class, in its own quiet way, was one of the most active classes in school. We boasted both J. V. and Varsity Basketball players, two cheerleaders, and the most musical talent. Our class overflowed with drummers, pianists, and guitar players. From the beginning of the year we tried to get our lockers moved from the Villa into the high school. We were unsuccessful, so those of us who could not find someone to share with were forced to make the three story climb several times a day. From Christmas until Easter we were without Mrs. Roberts to hear our poems and direct our syntax lessons. We anxiously awaited her return, as she had promised to bring us some American red licorice. Though the school year went a bit slowly for us at times, we were sorry to see it draw to a close. Never again will the same group of students be together. Now we must say goodbye to teachers and friends and move on to new experiences.

QUESTION 1: definition of Freshman year — Work... more work... Mr. Davidson... more work... French III... Ancient History (which equals more work)... Geometry with Coordinates (which equals more work)... 9th-12th Grade dances... even more work... belonging to the Upper School... being looked down on by the Upperclassmen in the Upper School.

QUESTION 2: explanation of question 1 — If you are at present a graduated J.H.S. person, don't hope for a glorious 9th Grade year because you won't get one! Going from 8th Grade to 9th Grade is like changing from a small duck to a medium duck who is looked down on by the GREAT BIG ducks (that is the Juniors and the oh-so-sacred Seniors).

Caught between tyrannical seniors and « superior » 7th graders, the 8th grade class has hardly ever been heard of by the rest of the upper school. We didn't really deserve to be ignored that much, for we were pretty active for a class that nobody knew existed. We sponsored four « well-organized » dances where most of the kids danced at least once and of which three were evening dances. Junior High Firsts! We also held quite a few cake sales, which were very successful. These proceeds were given to a needy Italian family we knew, or they went into our treasury to be saved for the Class Day picnic. Let it not be said that the 8th grade was not physically fit, although most of our teachers would say that our jaw muscles are the most exercised.

With the vigor that practically nobody noticed, we looked forward to the four years of senior high. Who knows, maybe senior privileges will be extended next year.

HERMEDA ROBERTSON

class of 1972

There is such an enormous leap between sixth and seventh grade. It seems to be the beginning of a « grown-up » life! The differences between lower school and junior high are many. We have so much more liberty now. In sixth grade, we couldn't say a word at lunch or anytime. We were mostly kept in one room: there was no moving about. When it was necessary to change rooms, we walked in a straight line; there was no free-for-all between classes. Instead of having the whole school at our disposal, we had only the closed field to « play » in. One class often overlapped another. Instead of BREAK, we had Recess. There were no dances.

On the other hand, we are the babies of the high school and are treated as such. In sixth grade we were the superiors. But we have learned and done so many interesting things in seventh grade. We went on many field trips around Rome and overnight to Assisi and Perugia. We even had our own paper, « The Journal of Thoughts ». The most interesting thing about this year, though, was being in seventh grade, at the start of a new life.

How still it is now
When years are bundled
As eggs in basket and
Carried carefully to market.

A child is grown.
The bet is laid.
Wait for the payoff, mother.
And be still. Time, be still.

Youth and innocence are passing.
Faith has given birth
To rejection
In the mind and the heart.

How still it is.
How peacefully we crawl on,
How calmly the moon submits
To the raw light of day.
And I, to your world.

This year has been for the Student Council not only an active one but also a successful one. Such is to be seen by noting that there was better organization in the clubs, that for the first time O.S.R. became known as a producer of good dances, and that through the many successful 7th-8th Grade dances, the Junior High school students came to possess feelings of greater independence and responsibility in the school. A very important achievement was the acquisition of the scoreboard, which arrived on the day of O.S.R.'s first game of the season and was therefore a high point for the entire student body, particularly the Student Council.

O.S.R. was represented in Paris by her Student Council President and Faculty Advisor at the first conference of the European Student Council of International Schools. At this meeting O.S.R.'s Student Council was elected as the organization's first director of Cultural Exchange.

The Student Council has performed well this year in its role as a representative and active group of the student body. We leave our positions with a sense of pride and accomplishment and with the hopes that next year's members will serve as successfully and happily as we have.

The woman named Tomorrow
 Counted by fives to five hundred,
 Stood at the theatre door and turned and drawled,
 - Beware the judges, my son,
 The eyes that cut, the pens that scratch -
 But soft - what light through yonder spotlight breaks?
 Screaming, screeching, and the Juniors pleading,
 Just the worst time of the year for a cold.
 But soft - what light through yonder spotlight breaks?
 Oh, it is my crematorium!
 And will you cut a stone for us
 And put it on our graves and stop back and say, - That's good! -
 For this is the time that bears men's hearts, but
 Just for Declaration we're as good as no one here.
 We have acted every possible part,
 With six months' practice we still will fail.
 Come down from the classes, Come!
 For it is portentous and a thing of farce
 That we do wait in sweaty fear.
 Oh children, oh children, see yonder, oh do,
 The poor Juniors waiting in the dark.
 Listen to the judges barking cold and clear,
 Well, Mr. Flood? Damn your flowerpot!
 The hatred that sets us tacks like that.
 For they are all laughing at us, and the poem, of course,
 As we pitch our day's terror, turning color once red.
 Our fear is astride, us for to ride.
 And the judges said, - That's Good! We'll all play at jury and condemn you to death. -

Lonely little puppy
Sits aloof from the rain.
Inside.
The water
Drips from the ceiling
To the cold cement floor.
And the door—
He's locked in.

He curls up in a corner
Of his box—not quite
Warm he isn't— a damp
Cold. And doggie goosepimples.
And rain outside.
The darkness
Crowds into the little corners
Of the big damp room.
Up the cement walls
And along the ceiling it rolls. Then it falls
Down into another corner.

The coat's warm fleas—
His is just a puppy coat
On which he sleeps— not his— charity.
The cold light of night glides into the room
From the windows
Making strange shadows on the floor.
And the door—
He's locked in.

We had a very active basketball season this year with much enthusiasm coming from the students. We took the first game of the season by beating Milan in both J. V. and Varsity games. We had the shortest but fastest team in the league. As the fellows from Milan said, « Each time we turned around there was a wall of red in front of us. » The season's high point was the four day tournament in Vicenza. We are all sorry to see our senior players leave, but we think our J. V. holds a great potential.

« HAPPINESS IS BEING TOGETHER »

And we were together for a basketball season, practicing, making pompoms, and travelling to Naples and Livorno with the boys. Naturally it wasn't all roses. In Naples we were met by pouring rain and arrived sopping-wet at the gym. In Livorno we spent our time in the Commissary and the Snack Bar, buying goodies to bring back to Rome.

Miss Halperin was our Guardian Angel, calling us up at various times and telling us it was time to sleep. (But who slept?) We lost Deena in the Commissary, Sue in the hotel in Naples; Madelyn was either admiring the panorama or sleeping; Ava pulled all sorts of muscles; Yasmine lost her pompoms, while Simone lived in a world of optimism.

Aside from all the other mistakes (which were all great after they occurred), it was a widely varied season during which we all had loads of fun and laughter.

We would like to give a great big thank-you to Miss Halperin for putting up with our moods and the never-ending sounds of « Reach Out... »

Olivetti machines in their millions are busy typing, adding, computing, transmitting data on production and economic matters - facts and figures that concern the daily work of Industry and Commerce: a nation's very existence.
The typewriter is Olivetti,
the printing adding machine is Olivetti,
the desk-top computer is Olivetti,
the data collection systems are Olivetti,
the equipment for transmitting this data
